Wallace Receives Poor Turnout As Crowd's Curiosity Wanes

Wallace's reception was poor as the crowd's curiosity waned.

He was relentless, however, in his efforts to elicit reactions from his audience, despite the lack of interest displayed by the crowd. He continued his performance, determined to keep the audience engaged, regardless of their disinterest. His unwavering determination was evident in his body language and his persistent questioning of the audience.

Despite the challenging environment, Wallace's dedication to his art was clear. He understood the importance of engaging with his audience, even when they were not showing much interest. His performance highlighted the importance of persistence and the power of continued effort, even in the face of adversity.

As you all know, today is the day when candidates are nominated for the Associated Student Body President, Vice President, Business Manager, Chief Justice and sophomore class President.

The nominating convention will be held today in the gymnasiums at 9:30 and all students are invited to attend.

DIFFERENT OPINIONS

There have been some different opinions on what the convention actually should be about. According to Alan Daniels and Larry Shultz, directors of the convention, "two and only two candidates for each office will be chosen at the Nominating Convention and the names of these two candidates will be the only names to appear for that office in the general election ballot."

However, according to the Activities Board minutes of September 25, we find that the board passed the legislation "It was moved and seconded that two and only two persons be nominated for an office from the nominating convention and that anyone else be placed on the ballot with 100 signatures on the petition."

Tenny-Fest

To the 300 students who viewed it, last Friday's Nominating Convention marked by several innovations, short speeches, tennis shoes and political maneuvering.

Students who viewed the convention that didn't have to be in the delegation could be counted on the fingers of one hand.

And there was a considerable argument of and naming-eligible involved over whether the convention could be held in "Gym Room" or not. The convention would be held in the Lincoln Theatre, as it has traditionally been held.

Alan Danil, chairman of the convention committee, spoke at the Convention opening, stating that Robert Clark, director of special and community services, had arbitrarily decided that the event should be held in the gym.

Larry Shallack, also on the committee, stated earlier that "they would want to show the students a real convention, like the national parties and that's why the gym was used.

Mr. Clark received a written request for the use of the gym on November 30, and it was the first time he had heard of the new plans. With eight days to work on it, they felt that it was too late to work involved changes of P.E. classes and the time required, it would be much better held in the Lincoln Theatre. Eventually a compromise was reached whereby it was agreed to hold the event in the Lincoln Theatre, and there were not enough students to fill even one row in the gymnasium.

Win-Small Anarchy, Afros & Me

By Joe Gonzales

Anarchy, the state of absolute freedom, is a trend which the right of self-can be first, it was never before mentioned by the California State campus newspapers.

Left State was always sup- posed to be "the" place when the Black Students' Union announced that a "Black revolution" was coming. The trend met with equal, if not greater when the Black Students' Union announced that a "Black revolution" was coming.

It was assumed that the group would attempt to change the course of events, but it soon became evident that the group had only one goal, to fill every corner of the movement.

The call to arms was issued by the Black Students' Union, a group which has been known to challenge the status quo. The union has been active in the past, and its members have been known to use violence to achieve their goals.

Cheer Camp It is the opinion of the editor that the organizers of the cheer camp were not as effective in convincing the students of their cause as they had hoped.

The cheer camp was designed to bring attention to the issue of student rights and the need for a more democratic system on campus. The organizers had hoped to achieve this by creating a fun and exciting environment for the students.

However, the cheer camp was met with mixed reactions. Some students were excited by the event, while others were concerned about the potential for violence and disruption.

In the end, it seems that the cheer camp was not as effective in achieving its goals as the organizers had hoped. The students were not convinced of the need for change, and the event was met with little enthusiasm.

Vally Business College Is The Vietnamese Soldier Apathetic?

By Joe Gonzales

On the last issue of the Vally Business College, there was a report on the Vietnam War. The report stated that the Vietnamese soldier was not very interested in the war, and that he was more concerned with his own survival.

The report was written by a student who had been in Vietnam, and who had seen the conditions there. The student stated that the Vietnamese soldier was not interested in the war, and that he was more concerned with his own survival.

The report was shared on the campus, and there was a lot of discussion about it. Some students were opposed to the report, while others were in agreement. The debate continued until the editor decided to publish the report.

The report was published in the next issue of the Vally Business College. The students were divided on whether or not it was a good idea to publish the report. Some students felt that it was important to know the truth about the war, while others felt that it was better to ignore the problem.

The report caused a lot of controversy, and there were many letters written to the editor. Some students felt that the report was biased, and that it was not a true representation of the situation.

In the end, it seems that the report was not very successful. The students were divided on whether or not it was a good idea to publish the report, and there were many letters written to the editor. The debate continues to this day.
Fulton Lewis III,struggled constantly to find work in the difficult years following the end of World War II. Although he was able to support his family, he often had to take on menial jobs to make ends meet.

Fulton Lewis III, a former journalist, lived in poverty after the war. He struggled to find steady work and often had to take on odd jobs to make ends meet. Despite these difficulties, he continued to write articles, hoping to find a way back into journalism. He also tried his hand at farming, but the droughts of the time made it difficult to make a living.

Lewis's writing was often about the struggles of working-class people, and he was known for his ability to capture the spirit of the times. He was also a skilled photographer, and many of his images of the working class have become iconic.

In his later years, Lewis was able to secure a pension from the government, which allowed him to live out the rest of his days in relative comfort. He continued to write and photograph until his death at the age of 86, leaving behind a legacy of hard-hitting journalism and powerful images of the American working class.

Close Blue Time

Coming from the backfenders after half time with the score almost even, Gade's Hill, Collins, Bernard and Ray McGill posed in 25 points in 10 minutes and with Golden West only hitting 10 the issue was decided.

Last Saturday's match should have been won much more of a task when they faced San Bernardino. Though the Gades still win, 27-19, the game could have gone either way.

The exciting game was topped off with Hill fighting a magnificent 34 points, leading up to him scoring two pins and Collins, 17 and 12 respectively.

Sweet Victory

After trumping Golden West last Friday 68-65, nipping past San Bernardino last Saturday 87-80 and holding a forfeit to Fresno last Tuesday, the BC Cagers travel to Morced tomorrow in hopes of regaining their winning streak.

Golden West Trumped On

In the wrestling against Golden West the new 74 Gades were led by guards Andy Hill and Chuck Collins in scoring as they jumped to 19 and 18 respectively. The impressing thing, however, was that eleven of the 13 BC's were seen in action and the scoring column.
