Dr. Richard Wright takes time out of his schedule to talk with Bree Barrett and John Culpe, both of whom are members of the campus community, believing in talking to different groups to get input, would like to talk to the legislature about next year's budget.

Wright goes after budget

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the conclusion of the two-part series on new BC President Dr. Richard Wright plans to deal with the budgetary problems of the BC community and other BC problems as well. By SAI YING CHU)

Although reaching out to the backcountry community is one way he is trying to raise funds, BC President Dr. Richard Wright also plans to approach the California State Legislature.

"Dr. James Young, chancellor of the Kern Community College District and I are planning to go and talk to our legislators," promised Wright.

The newly selected president explained that a Coalition of California Community Colleges was to talk to the governor about the financial situation of the community colleges.

The Coalition, comprised of representatives from all 112 community colleges, is working to restore the state aid for the colleges.

"We don't want to have a "lost year," said Wright, because if the legislature fails to appropriate enough money for the community colleges, the community college system will depend on the financial aid of the federal government.

"My approach is to look at all the options," concluded the 39-year-old Wright.

From the Editor

Whose fault is it anyway?

"Teachers aren't doing their jobs." "They aren't teaching our children." "They aren't teaching the poor." "They aren't teaching the rich." "They aren't teaching the middle class." These are common complaints heard in schools across the country. But who is really responsible for the poor education of our children?

It's easy to blame the teachers for the lack of education in our schools. But we must also consider the role of the parents and the students themselves.

Hall ambulance aims to provide services

Training at BC adds to programs success

By CAROL WILSON

The Los Angeles Times

Hall ambulance services, a division of the Los Angeles County Fire Department, is expanding its training program at the new BC training center.

According to BC's Director of Ambulance Services, James C. H. Brown, the new center will allow ambulance personnel to receive more comprehensive training, including advanced life support (ALS) and emergency care.

"The center will provide a hands-on learning environment for our ambulance personnel, allowing them to gain practical experience and improve their skills," said Brown.

In addition to the new training center, BC is also expanding its fleet of ambulances, with plans to add more vehicles in the future.

"We are committed to providing the best possible care for our patients, and this expansion is a step in the right direction," said Brown.

The new training center is located in downtown Los Angeles, near the county's main hospital. It includes classrooms, simulation rooms, and a state-of-the-art medical facility.

"We are excited about the new training center and look forward to the benefits it will bring to our team," said Brown.

Evaluation of the new training center is scheduled to begin in the next few weeks. The center will be open to the public for tours.

Opinion

Waste not, want not

What a waste! I really need to reread for summer school, but with only one week left, I had barely read half the book by the end of the summer break. I know I should make more progress, but I just can't seem to find the time.

I think the problem is that I'm not enjoying the book. I'm not really interested in the plot or the characters. I feel like I'm just going through the motions, and it's not helping me to understand the material.

I also struggle with finding a good place to stop reading. I want to read on, but I also want to save time for other activities. It's a constant battle.

I know I should make more effort to read, but sometimes it feels like a burden. I really need to find a way to make it more enjoyable and less of a chore.

Letters to the editor

The halls were empty. The clock struck 12:00, and everyone left for the day. The only sound was the soft whirring of the air conditioning system. It was a quiet moment, one that was almost peaceful.

I was a student in that school, and I remember thinking to myself, "This is what the world looks like when it's quiet." It was a moment of introspection, and I realized that I had been taking things for granted. I had been so busy with my studies that I had forgotten to take a moment to appreciate my surroundings.

It's a lesson I've learned throughout my life, and I hope to continue to remind myself of it. Life is too short to waste time or energy on things that don't matter. It's important to take a moment to appreciate the small things in life.

Math mentor praised

I've been a teacher for over 20 years now, and I've had the pleasure of working with many wonderful students throughout my career. One student, in particular, stands out in my mind. He was a young man, about 16 years old, who had a lot of potential but was struggling to find his way.

I remember sitting with him during one of our sessions, and I asked him about his future plans. He told me that he wanted to become a math teacher, but he didn't think he had the talent or the ability to do so.

I told him that he was wrong, and that he had a lot of talent. I encouraged him to keep working hard and to believe in himself. I also recommended that he talk to his guidance counselor about his options.

A few months later, I received a call from the student's mother. She thanked me for my help, and she told me that her son had decided to pursue a career in math teaching. She said that he was doing well in his studies and was excelling in his work.

I'm happy to say that he is now a successful math teacher, and he has helped many students just like him. It's a testament to the power of mentorship and the importance of believing in others.

Campus poll

I'm not sure if this is what you're looking for, but I'll give it a shot. It's a question about the ASB elections, and it's asking whether you've voted or not.

I voted, but I didn't have the chance to vote. I was too busy with my studies. I think it's important to participate in these elections, but I just couldn't find the time.

I hope that more students will take the time to vote in the future. It's a responsibility that we all have, and it's important to be a voice for change.

Flashdance bursts with energetic flair

I think you might be looking for something related to dance, and I can help with that. "Flashdance" is a musical that premiered on Broadway in 1983 and has been a hit ever since.

The show is about a young janitor named Alex, who dreams of becoming a dancer. He falls in love with a woman named Ali, who is also a dancer, and they both struggle to make ends meet.

The music and dancing in "Flashdance" are truly incredible, and it's a must-see for anyone who loves dance or music. I hope you have the opportunity to see this show sometime.

Choral group to present classics

I think you might be looking for something related to music, and I can help with that. Our school's choral group is performing a concert this weekend, and it's going to be a great show.

The group will be performing a variety of classical pieces, including some of my favorites. I think you'll really enjoy it. I hope you can make it to the concert.
