ASBC loses reserve funds to district

Student government no longer controls $282,512 account after board action

By Percy Ednalino
Editor in Chief

Bakersfield College's student government will have to become more creative in planning events and in budgeting its income this year because it has lost its reserves, according to campus officials.

"The students have a lot less income," said Kathy Rosellini, director of student activities. "ASBC reserves are no longer there."

According to Rosellini, most of the money was taken away by the district board of trustees in June. The board decided that student government had no control over co-curricular funding and that ASBC had no control over the bookstore and any monies generated by it. Rosellini said that the bookstore matter has not yet been resolved.

Dr. Sandra Serrano, dean of students, said that approximately $282,512 was in the ASBC reserve fund. She also said that the money has been placed in a fund that can only be used at the district level.

"The monies have been earmarked for instructionally related activities," she said.

The ASBC had an agreement with the district that would allow it to operate the bookstore, but according to Serrano, that agreement expired three years ago. The operation of the bookstore then went back to the district.

Rosellini said that the biggest change she could foresee was that clubs and other organizations would have to look elsewhere for money since ASBC would not be able to provide any funds for those groups. She also said that clubs and on-campus organizations would have to become more reliant on fund raising and donations.

Last year, student government's annual budget was $150,000, not counting reserves. This year, that figure has dropped to about $50,000. The reserve account had been growing for the past 15 years, from bookstore sales, according to Serrano. The account had been used to cover excess spending by ASBC.

Along with fewer dollars, student government also is dealing with numerous officer vacancies. An election will be held in September, according to Frank Purnell, ASBC president.

The positions of vice president and business manager are two of the vacancies that need to be filled.

"It's unusual to lose what I call the 'biggies,' the vice president, business manager," said Rosellini.

She said that two of the positions lost were due to grades. ASBC officers are required to maintain a 2.0 GPA and be enrolled in at least six units. The ASBC president also should have at least one semester's student government experience.

Purnell almost became another casualty because of grades, but according to Rosellini, he resolved that problem by raising his GPA during the summer by attending summer classes.

"He's back, he's here every day," said Rosellini. "He's hit the ground running."

She said that not much could have been done to prevent the loss of the officers, but suggested that an orientation session be held for ASBC candidates in the future.

Rosellini said that the ASBC will be looking at new ways at marketing itself to entice students to become involved in student government.

Sign-ups for students interested in running for any of the vacant positions will be held during the first week of school, with campaigns held during the second week.

BC concert kicks off annual Kern ArtsFest

The second annual Kern Island ArtsFest opens on the Bakersfield College campus Sunday.

The eight-week event is a collaborative effort of Bakersfield College, the Kern Shakespeare Festival and the Bakersfield Symphony Orchestra.

Dedicated to developing a deeper appreciation of the arts, the ArtsFest features more than two dozen events, most on Sundays and Thursdays. The festival showcases fine and performing arts ranging from Mexican dance to country western line dancing, Japanese Kabuki-children's theater to Shakespearean drama, according to Michele M. Allen, director of public information at BC.

The ArtsFest begins Sunday with a Bakersfield Symphony Summer Pops Concert, including the 1812 Overture and fireworks. Other musical events include Dixieland and barbershop harmonies, gospel sounds, piano accompanied by soprano solos and poetry, Big Band dancing and jazz at sunset. The festival also includes a juried art competition and a fiber arts display.

Most events are $5, with students' and seniors' admission set at $3. Three Bakersfield Symphony Orchestra concerts in the festival cost $10 for adults and $5 for students and seniors. Children 12 and under will be admitted free to all events. Five of the 27 events are free. For more information, call BC at 395-4326 or the Bakersfield Symphony at 323-7928.

But the festival isn't about making money, according to Pat Shaffer, BC dean for development and an ArtsFest executive board member.

"Its three founding organizations are dedicated to opening the doors to fine arts in this community and doing so inexpensively enough that citizens can afford to experiment with new kinds of art and entertainment," he said.

Sponsors include The Bakersfield Californian; Bakersfield College Community Education and Services; The Chevron Companies; Hillcrest Memorial Park and Mortuary; KBID Radio; Que Suave Radio; Rain for Rent; Shell Western E&P, Inc.; and Three Way Chevrolet. Additional sponsors are being sought, Shaffer said.

Financial aid director remembered for dedication to students

Mary Llou Wilson, a prominent Bakersfield College educator and leader in community college financial aid, died this summer at the age of 48 after three years of battling cancer.

Wilson will be missed by students and co-workers alike, according to Dr. Rick Wright, BC president.

"The loss of Mary Llou will not only impact her colleagues at BC but also the many students who have come here based primarily on her ability to find ways for them to make higher education affordable," he said. "Over the years, Mary Llou constantly kept students at the center of her focus, and through the financial aid and scholarship programs that she developed and directed, she helped many students fulfill their dream of obtaining a college degree."

When Wilson became director of financial aid at BC in 1985, only 856 students were requesting federal financial aid, according to the financial aid office. By the end of the 1993-94 school year, this number had reached 4,285 students, or a 400 percent increase. This growth was the result of Wilson's perseverance and the hard work of her staff. Under her direction, about 10,000 students received a total of $3 million in financial assistance this past year.

Wilson was equally as dedicated to BC's scholarship program, often becoming friends to the many members of the community who contributed scholarships to the college. At the annual Sophomore Honor Brunch held in May, a total of $95,000 in scholarships was presented to more than 200 students.

She was an innovator in technology related to networking a variety of financial aid programs. According to financial aid officials, Wilson also presented a comprehensive workshop in December to Kern High School District counselors and other agencies.

She presented financial aid workshops to parents and students at local high schools and attended high school award ceremonies to present scholarships to incoming Bakersfield College students.

Several of her colleagues described Wilson as a compassionate, dedicated and caring person who was known for her strength and integrity. She took an active interest in the lives of those who worked with her and considered co-workers her second family.

A memorial scholarship has been established in her name. For more information, contact the financial aid office at 395-4527.

Cooperative ed offers credit for on-the-job experience

Students can receive college credit for job experience through Bakersfield College's Cooperative Work Experience Education program.

Cooperative Education offers students the chance to combine classroom learning with on-the-job experience. The goal of the program is to help students find a career and to achieve success based on that choice, according to program officials.

The program is offered in all subject areas and provides elective credit for all college majors. Many four-year colleges will accept up to eight transfer units of cooperative work experience toward the completion of a bachelor's degree. Students should find out information about credits and restrictions from their intended four-year institution, officials advise.

The program offers two types of cooperative work experience: general work experience education and occupational work experience education.

General work experience education is supervised employment which assists students in acquiring desirable work habits, attitudes and career awareness. The work experience need not be related to the students' educational goals.

Occupational work experience is supervised employment that extends classroom-based occupational learning to an on-the-job learning site that is related to the students' educational or occupational goals.

For more information on the program, call 395-4550.

Satellite campus put on hold despite farmer's gift of land

By Delaina Lawson
Opinion Editor

A Bakersfield man who donated 160 acres of farm land to Bakersfield College will have to wait a little longer to publicly honor the memory of his father.

Two years ago, Bill Destefani donated the acres of grape and alfalfa fields near Panama Lane and Buena Vista Road to BC for the specific purpose of building a satellite campus, but with the recent defeat of proposition 1C on the June ballot, the satellite campus will be delayed.

Destefani attached a conditional clause to the donation agreement specifying that the Ag Department or some other department at the new facility be named in honor of his father, Albert Destefani.

Albert Destefani died in 1982 at the age of 60. He had been a Kern County resident and farmer his whole life.

Proposition 1C was a bond measure for higher education and would have funded the development of the new satellite campus.

According to Jennifer Galehouse, legislative assistant to Assemblyman Jim Costa, D-Fresno, it's not likely that another higher education measure will be on the November ballot.

Destefani expressed optimism that BC would eventually get the campus.

"The general public is leery of any type of taxes, so the mood is not good, but that will change," said Destefani. "Eventually the bond issue will pass and everything will come about."

In addition to other projects on campus, construction workers remodel the patio area in Campus Center.

Projects aid disabled students

Those who grumble about construction need reality check

The campus looks different this semester. Everything, everywhere seems to be turned upside down, and getting from one end of the campus to the other is a bit like running an obstacle course. But please don't grumble; instead, we suggest that you take the time to appreciate the ease in which all you able-bodied students breeze through the campus. Consider this as part of your curriculum—Disabled Student's Reality Appreciation Course 101.

We know that the quad area, sidewalks, parking lots, dormitory and inside the gym look like they've been hit with hand grenades, and some teachers are finding out that their room keys don't work, but this is all part of making BC more accessible to its disabled student population. Call it growing pains.

According to Dr. Claire Larsen, associate dean of operations, many

BY

of the construction items on campus should be settled down by the start of school, or at the latest, two to three weeks into the semester.

Larsen said that there are three construction projects in the works at the campus—the Architectural Barrier Removal Project (ABR), the Applied Science Building Renovation Project and the Allied Health Building Project.

The ABR project is responsible for most of the destruction. It is designed to install vertical lifts, chair lifts, stair lifts and ramps for wheelchair-bound students, change all the door handles to the lever type, remodel the restrooms (some of you may remember that dilemma from last semester), install handrails, replace the center patio area (quad area), widen doorways and numerous other things.

According to Larsen, everything is torn up all at once because of the timing of the 1993-1994 state budget funds which were allotted to BC. Because BC recently received the funding, now is the time for construction. Use it or lose it, he explained.

"It's going to make BC one of the most accessible colleges in the state," said Dr. Don Johnson, director of supportive services.

Johnson is pleased yet concerned about the construction. He explained it will be difficult for all students and especially difficult for blind and visually impaired students during the construction phase.

"My best advice is to disregard any preconceived notions about how the campus is configured," he said.

According to Johnson, one mishap already has happened. A blind student was using a ramp and discovered that half-way down, the ramp turned into stairs. The student was not injured.

To compensate for these types of problems, mobility specialists will be at hand to assist visually impaired people in learning the new campus layout, Johnson said.

Change is almost always difficult, but we can't grow without it. We need to acknowledge the growing pains, appreciate our abilities and look forward to a more user-friendly campus in the future.

And if you catch yourself starting to complain about the obstacles, do a reality check on the barriers that you don't have to face.

ASBC welcomes newcomers to campus

I want to take this opportunity to welcome all the new students to BC and the returning students as well.

This will be the best year ever in the history of Bakersfield College!

There are key student government positions filled with newcomers and student government "veterans" as well.

Having been the sophomore class president, ASBC vice president and now the ASBC president, I can assure you that my officers and I are here to serve you, the student. My office is open to any student, anytime, for any reason.

Campus Center. Kathy Rosellini, director of student affairs, and her staff are dedicated to serving the students.

We have many activities planned for the 1994-95 school year, such as Homecoming, Spring Fling, awards banquets and scholarships. I would encourage each and every student to get involved in one of the 25-30 clubs on campus. You also have a school newspaper, The Renegade Rip, under the supervision of editor Percy Ednalino, that is dedicated to accurate journalism and keeping you, the student, informed.

I also would encourage each and every student to purchase a Student Services Card, as this will pay for itself three to four times over in discounts.

I also would like to announce ASBC elections, which will be held in early September. The following student government positions are vacant: vice president, business manager, secretary; two sophomore class representatives; two associate justices; and freshman class officers, including freshman, vice president, secretary and two freshman representatives.

For those of you who are political science buffs, come see me regarding student government.

Again, I want to welcome all students to BC this year. We have a great administration and faculty and they are here to make sure that we, the students, succeed.

Out of the 107 junior colleges in California, let's you and I make BC No. 1! Let's be the "cutting edge" for everyone else in the community college system.

Let's Get Ready to RUMBLE

By Percy Ednalino

Razor Ramon and Bam Bam Bigelow weren't interested in enrolling when they visited Bakersfield College this summer.

They were more interested in breaking heads.

Ramon and Bigelow were two of the World Wrestling Federation's wrestlers who came to BC for an event sponsored by the Bakersfield Reserve Fire Department Burn Foundation. According to reserve firefighter Rob Hendricks, the June 29 event was held to raise money for a trailer designed to help teach about fire safety.

The event kept the reserve firefighters busy as they had to battle the 100 degree heat of the gym caused by the weather and spotlights that were used. Conditions were even hotter because of the lack of any air conditioning in the gymnasium.

"Everybody knows California leads the nation in tax cheating!" Shyster said. With the support of the crowd behind him, fan favorite Tatanka defeated L.R.S. pinning him in the middle of the ring.

Another newcomer to the WWF, Duke The Dumpster Drosse, came to the ring dressed as you guessed it, a garbage collector and even brought a metal trash can to the ring with him. Adam Bomb, his opponent, wasted no time in using the trash can to his advantage, hitting Drosse over the head with the can after being defeated by The Dumpster.

But in what was literally the biggest match of the night, two of the WWF's most massive wrestlers locked horns. Mabel, a member of the tag team Men on a Mission, faced Bigelow, who bore more than a slight resemblance to Curly of the Three Stooges. But in the end, Mabel was the victor, practically body slamming the flame-shaped tattoos adorning Bam-Bam's head.

The main event featured the WWF's intercontinental champion, Big Daddy Cool Diesel, and the former champion, Ramon, otherwise known as "The Bad Guy." Diesel used his championship belt to beat Ramon senseless, which caused Diesel to be disqualified. But Diesel retained his title because the WWF does not allow a championship to be won by a disqualification.

Tag team of Pritchard and the Barbarian raise their hands in self-proclaimed victory.

Big Daddy Cool Diesel retains his belt despite earlier disqualification.

Doctor's loyalty to 'Gades spans decades

By Paul Park
Rip staff writer

Dr. Romain Clerou has been a Bakersfield College fixture since he attended school here in 1934. The former BC football player was the team's doctor from 1946 to 1987, when he turned over the title to Dr. Bill Baker.

Clerou, 80, is in general practice. He said his own football career ended due to an injured knee while attending UC Berkley.

But his love for the game continued as he worked as the football team doctor for 41 years at no charge.

"At BC, the program ranks over the state because of his commitment that he has given us," said Carl Bowser, head football coach and men's athletic director.

"Ties like that make a junior college first class."

Clerou has been a father figure to the coaches, according to Bowser.

"He has become a father figure to all of the coaches and become a very personal friend. A type of guy who is your father, he is your best friend, and uncle to you," he said.

BC is fortunate because the football team has doctors and a dentist, who travel with it on road games.

"When you get an elderly patient that you have had for forty or fifty years ... it is harder for them to come to my office than it is for me to go out and see them."

—Dr. Romain Clerou
former team doctor

Like Clerou, office visits and routine medical assistance often are given without charge.

"When I practiced, we didn't have the expensive equipment that cost money," Clerou recalled. "When they came to my office, I never charged them anything."

In 1982, the field house was built and named after Clerou as a tribute to his years of service to the college.

Today, he still makes house calls.

"I wouldn't say I was the only doctor but sure, I make house calls," he said.

"When you get an elderly patient that you have had for forty or fifty years, and say they get sick, it is harder for them to come to my office than it is for me to go out and see them. So sometimes it's a social call and sometimes I bill them the usual, depending on what I do. It depends on what their problem is."

The Bakersfield native has six children.

Clerou said he was saddened by the suspension of athletics at Taft College.

"Taft has had football as long as I can remember," he said. "I was hoping that some corporation would come in and at least support the football team. I guess that is not in the works as far as I understand. It is very expensive to run a football team."

Clerou's love for the game and dedication has set an example for younger doctors, Bowser said.

"It is really difficult to get a doctor to come up on a Saturday night to give shots or treat guys or spend ten hours at the game," the coach explained.

"He is just a great guy who believes in young people and just likes to help kids."
